PROBABLE ARTILLERY REGIMENT, PYONGYANG, NORTH KOREA

The probable artillery regiment is dispersed through four adjacent valleys and includes three probable artillery battalion areas and a headquarters and support area (Figure 2). Each of the battalion areas contains five barracks, an administration building, eight to ten storage/support buildings, a messhall and a vehicle shed (Figure 3). The headquarters area contains two barracks, 15 quarters, an administration building, four administration/support buildings, four support buildings, a messhall and a vehicle shed.

Two of the battalions have ten field artillery pieces, and the third appears to have only six or seven; the calibre is probably 122/152mm.
